

TRAIL BUSINESS WEEKLY

INDUSTRY NEWS | FOOTWEAR & APPAREL

---

Hollowridge Cuts In on Price as Trail Running Competition Heats Up

By Casey Whitlow | October 8, 2026

Hollowridge Athletic's newly announced Trailfire 3 lands at US$149, undercutting several rivals' flagship trail shoes by US$10 to US$20 at a moment when discount pressure across the category has been building for two straight quarters. The Portland-based brand framed Tuesday's announcement around weight savings and outsole durability, but the price point is what caught the trade's attention first.

Trail running has seen slower unit growth this year than the broader running category, and several retailers this reporter spoke with said they've been pushing brands for sharper pricing on mid-tier trail shoes heading into the holiday season. Hollowridge's press materials do not mention pricing strategy directly, framing the US$149 tag as a byproduct of manufacturing efficiencies from the new FeatherCore foam rather than a competitive move.

Whether the Trailfire 3's price holds through the winter selling season, or slides further with promotions, will be an early signal of how much pricing pressure the category is actually under.

---

Trail Business Weekly, Casey Whitlow, and all quotes and figures in this article are fictional, created as a sample file for Siri AI Visual Bible, Book 2, Chapter 2.6. Any resemblance to a real publication or writer is unintentional.